Abstract: The end of the 21st century finds the world in a great economic and political turmoil. On the one hand, the highly developed countries try to extend their influence outside the territorial borders to the resource-rich areas, on the other hand the developing countries try to reach the great powers, and not least the poor countries that are in fierce struggle with poverty. An unfair world we could say and unequal in terms of power vectors.

If we think that the two great world conflagrations of the last century were preceded by strong economic crises, we will come to wonder whether or not we are in a new war or on the verge of a new world war. The beginning of the 21st century brings new types of battlefield actors, new types of threats and new methods and techniques for approach of the battle actions.

Keywords: military action, military intervention, coalitions, planning, surprise.

Introuction

Since its inception, mankind has marked its development through various facts and actions, which have been constituted in historic moments. Of these facts and actions, the armed confrontations were and are the most distinct landmarks. Over time, following armed confrontations, there disappeared civilizations that put their mark on human evolution and development, but also after armed confrontations, new civilizations appeared.

Thus, all the armed conflicts, from the wars of antiquity and the Middle Ages, to the two world conflagrations of the 20th century are very
